

Why are Python programmers so good at solving relationship problems?

Because they're used to dealing with commitment issues that arise from a single improper space.